Paolo Iannone

Dear Sir,

Our beloved patron of Catholic University of Lublin John Paul II said: „The man is great not by what he possesses, but by who he is; not by what he has, but by what he shares with others”.

We would like to thank you for the time you have found to share with our students and for your open mind on the problems they have solved with you. It is a great thing to have an ability to communicate with young people and to know how to show them many possibilities of perception of the world and its social and economic problems.

It is not that easy to go beyond the given horizon, when we do not have knowledge that we can have, when we do not have a personal testimony which will show us that there could be many points of view on one matter.

We believe our students will build the better future of the world by using the patterns we have given them. One of them was Your lesson about the leadership, people management, career paths, organizational culture and the most important values, like responsibility, free will, trust and hard work.

You are always welcome in The John Paul II Catholic University of Lublin! Especially in The Institute of Sociology and in The Department of Contemporary Sociological Theories and Social Microstructures, which has the specialization “Economic Sociology”.

Come back to us soon, we are looking forward to seeing you in the nearest future.

Sincerely yours,
mgr Alina Betlej
