The city of Bremen

Bremen - Leisure & cultural offer
Bremen is cosmopolitan and multicultural, steeped in tradition and “gemütlich” as the Germans say - a modern metropolis which is home to over half a million people and where you too will quickly feel at home. The city boasts a number of multi-faceted and very diverse districts: Ostertor has urban flair, the banks of the River Weser are distinctly maritime, Neustadt is cult and Walle nestles around the docklands. And you are never far from green, open spaces. Bremen offers a whole host of cultural events and has a vibrant pub and music scene. Many of the events held in the summer are open-air. The North Sea coast and the Wörpswede artists’ colony are within easy reach and starting points to explore the surrounding countryside - on foot or by boat, public transport or bike, of course.

The university city of Bremen

Bremen University
Around 23,000 people study, teach, work and are engaged in research on the international campus. The university offers around 100 degree programmes covering a broad range of academic subjects. Its strengths include the close link between theory and practice, its numerous collaborations with foreign universities and research institutions, and the internationality of its research and teaching. Bremen University is renowned for its excellent research centres and institutes, and those working in space research and space technology, marine research, the geosciences, European law and politics, social policy and Eastern European studies in particular are some of the leading academic institutions in Germany.
