

CALL FOR PAPERS

for

THE 7th EARLY STAGES: STUDENT SYMPOSIUM ON LITERARY AND CULTURAL STUDIES
to be held online on June 2, 2022

There are countless cultural, social, economic and philosophical issues that are reflected upon in various “texts” of the English-speaking countries. While examining these themes, students will have an opportunity to demonstrate that research methods used in different academic disciplines (such as cultural anthropology, social sciences, philosophy, art, music, etc) could benefit each other. Therefore, one of the central goals of the symposium is to provide students with a forum for an exchange of ideas and thoughts concerning the texts of English-speaking countries.

The symposium aims to develop new analytical approaches to literary and cultural studies with particular attention to the issues relevant to students’ own research areas. Thus, students and doctoral students whose academic interests intersect with literary and cultural studies are encouraged to consider participating in the symposium.

Students and doctoral students are cordially invited to submit conference papers (approx. 20-minute presentations) on the texts of English-speaking cultures. Contributions should be in English.

Please send a short abstract (about 200 words) by May 15, 2022 to the following email address: dominika.narecka@gmail.com
