Purpose of the Conference

The theme of this year's 6th edition of the International Academic Conference "Style and Quality of Life of Modern Humanity" is "Family and Society."

The theme was not chosen accidentally. The family is a mainstay of societies. It ranks high in the hierarchy of values in many of them. The family is the smallest community in society and is responsible for the development and upbringing of the young generation. However, the family is not a fully autonomous structure; it depends on society. In turn, the condition of the family reflects the changes taking place in society.

Society, the state and its institutions must safeguard the family's rights and duties. It seems reasonable to state the dependence that exists between the family and society: there is no society without a family, and the condition of the family depends on the condition of the society.

A multidisciplinary view of structure and functioning, as well as the changes and problems of the modern family and the prospects that stand before it is the main topic for open discussion by conference participants.

The following conference sections will search for solutions:

Family definition; Types of families; Family functions and tasks; Family – history, tradition and the present; Family and society; Values in the family; Family and religion; Family, marriage and parenthood; A child in the family; Family and living conditions; Family health; Family and culture; Family and law; Family, free time and work; Politics and the family; Support and assistance for families; Family problems.
