“Tweeting with God” is worth getting to know from both pastoral and media perspectives. The Dutch Catechism created the perspective that Christians encounter different religions and ideologies, and that we need to explain the approach of Catholicism in relation to old and new ideological trends. Today there is a new “Dutch” idea of passing down the faith to younger generations through social media. In this model the current young generation asks questions of the Church, and the Church – in this case through a cleric, a single priest leading pastoral groups – attempts to give them the answer. Written responses are placed in a book and in modern applications, and via smartphone, tablet, or other tools, these responses allow access to the world of religious leading a dialog of faith in social media.
