Abstract The publication entitled 'Educare e comunicare in un mondo virtuale. Opportunità e rischi in prospettiva antropologico-morale' (To educate and communicate in the virtual world. Opportunities and risks in the anthropological and moral perspective) is certainly worthy of becoming acquainted with in the anthropological and moral perspective. Polish readers will find there numerous inspirational thoughts of the Italian theologians who take the subject of media education in the broad meaning. They can familiarise with the valuable achievements of the Magisterium of the Catholic Church in Italy and can participate in an interesting discussion on the necessity of education in the world of media. Continuous change of communication forms and styles poses a serious challenge and encouragement for those responsible in Church for the issues of media education in order to explore research in various languages concerning them. For young scholars in the field of media education in Europe, the acquaintance with the review and the book itself will allow for further scientific development in this rapidly growing field of research.
