

The basic success of the Visegrad Group is that it is still ongoing. The main objectives have been achieved. Cooperation, undertaken mainly for rational, pragmatic reasons, has continued, despite emerging concerns and differences over often fundamental matters. This indicates that the Visegrad countries are aware of the existence of much more durable ties that connect them. Thus, differences do not cause mutual abandoning of efforts but rather inspire a search for common ground.

In this publication the authors of individual texts present the evolution of a particular country's political system. They point to the problems and successes in each dimension, especially the legislative, executive and judiciary. The value of this work is its international character. It was created as a result of research of academics from recognized research and centres and universities in the Czech Republic, Poland, Slovakia and Hungary.

Cooperating Universities

University of Ss Cyril and Methodius in Trnava, Slovakia
The John Paul II Catholic University of Lublin, Poland

ISBN 978-80-8105-434-1

Political Systems of Visegrad Group Countries

Editor - Wojciech Gizicki

Trnava - Lublin 2012